

FTI to work with ABC

THE Film and Television Institute (FTI) in Fremantle and the ABC will collaborate to increase the level of “e-learning” skills in both organisations.

The project will see trainers from both organisations develop skills in building learning networks through “blogging” and “podcasting”.

The 2005–06 Australian Flexible Learning Framework has provided funding for the collaboration through its professional development project, “Learnscope”.

FTI professional development and training manager Graeme Watson said the screen industry was one of the fastest technologically developing business sectors.

“To keep on top of developments we need to have new and innovative methods for building and sharing knowledge at lightning speed,” he said.

The team will begin research this month.